Purpose of this Toolkit

This toolkit is designed to help funders who are interested in funding self-advocates and self-advocacy organizations to have a better understanding of how to work best with people with disabilities, and make sure their needs are met throughout the grant process. This toolkit is the result of needs that were identified by the Association of University Centers on Disabilities (AUCD) while providing technical assistance for a self-advocacy pilot grant project that was funded by the Administration on Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (AIDD).

Background

In 2011-2012, AIDD funded self-advocacy summits and leadership gatherings of self-advocates and their partners to collect information around self-advocacy activities and policies in each of the 56 U.S. states and territories. The goal of these summits was “to learn what each state was doing around self-advocacy, help each state develop and present a state plan to strengthen their activities around this area, and develop national policy recommendations for AIDD and its partnering organizations” (Summits, 2013). During these summits, the top theme identified by self-advocates and their partners was a need to provide support to strengthen self-advocacy and empower self-advocacy organizations. As a result, AIDD funded a series of pilot grants, managed by AUCD, in order to address these needs.

During the self-advocacy pilot grant projects, a number of recommendations were identified by the Association of University Centers on Disabilities (AUCD), who managed the contracting process provided technical assistance to the self-advocate grantees. These are some of the highlighted recommendations from that experience that may be useful for future Funders:

- Accessibility in grant-making is a topic with very scarce resources; AUCD is pleased to develop this toolkit and make resources available for future use.
 - The lessons learned from this first effort represent initial development of a body of knowledge which identifies and refines successful strategies for supporting self-advocacy groups to become independent.
 - Adding to this small number of currently funded organizations will amplify the effort to empower self-advocacy organizations and will be more likely to have a national impact on self-advocacy organizations desiring increased independence and demonstrate a continued level of support to the self-advocacy community.

Key Concepts in Self-Advocacy

Self-advocates are people with disabilities who are advocating for themselves and others. Because there is a broad spectrum of disabilities, an individual's needs for accommodation and support may also be very wide in scope. When working with self-advocates, it is important to take the time necessary to understand what accommodations are needed. Requests for reasonable accommodations should be honored. Some examples of reasonable accommodations may include:

- A person with an intellectual disability may need a more easily understood version of a contract or require the contract to be explained.
- A person with a sight-related disability may require that a document be provided in braille.

- Some self-advocacy groups may need to request a time extension on a deadline in order to have enough time to fully understand the requirements for an application.

Another important element about working with self-advocacy organizations is to include people with disabilities in every step of the process. This includes the initial development of ideas, the application review process, monitoring of grant activity, and the final reporting procedures.

Many funders may not understand the importance of including people with disabilities at all levels of the grant process. Because self-advocates are often marginalized and face discrimination because of their disability, it is critical that groups working with self-advocates make a proactive, conscious effort to guide decision-making by the disability rights mantra, which states:

“Nothing About Us, Without Us”

Not including self-advocates in your grant process may send a message of distrust to the organizations you are seeking to empower, and cause self-advocates to feel that their voice and viewpoints are not valued. Therefore, it is critical to include self-advocates as equal members of your grant development team, from start to finish.

Lessons Learned Across All Phases of Grantmaking

During its involvement with the Allies in Self-Advocacy pilot grants, AUCD requested feedback from all involved parties. It is imperative that we learn what worked and what didn't, and share these lessons with organizations who support self-advocacy groups to support future funding opportunities for self-advocacy organizations. Outlined below are lessons learned in each phase; these are presented in bullet-point format so they can be easily identified in the report and taken into consideration for replication.

Developing the Request for Applications

1. Use language that is easy to understand and support printed language with appropriate pictures and clip art
2. Color-code each grant opportunity. In the case of the pilot grants noted above, two grant opportunities were made available, and were referenced as Group A and Group B. All reference to Group A grants were in orange, and all reference to Group B grants were in blue. See example in Appendix A.
3. Informational calls for applicants should provide detail in multiple formats, such as conference calls, online meeting rooms for visual support, and closed captioning.
4. Be present and available daily to respond to questions regarding the Request for Applications outside of the informational call.
5. Provide adequate time for organizations to develop the applications.
6. Include templates for each section of the application in the Request for Applications as appendices (Ex: templates for the application cover page, narrative with required sections, and budget).
7. Provide a glossary to explain grants/contracts terms that may be unfamiliar.
8. Provide the scoring rubric so applicants understand how they will be scored.
9. If using an online application system, ensure that the number of available upload fields matches the number of documents required to be uploaded. This will support applicants in making a 1:1 correlation between what is required to submit, and what they are actually submitting. Naming these fields for uploading to match what should be uploaded would be additional assistance.

10. Include an evaluation component (external or via technical assistance) that grantees have to respond to at the end of their grant, so they have the opportunity to reflect on outcomes. This is harder than expected, especially with fledgling organizations.
11. A question in the proposal should address the specific outcomes that the RFA is intended to address (i.e., deliverables) – the more clear this is on the front end, the better the applications and outcomes on the back end.

Panel Review of Applications

1. As noted above, reviewers should reflect the population who are expected to submit applications. Self-advocates who have experience in the topic being funded should be included in the review panels and decision-making process.
2. A training call for reviewers must be mandatory. It should provide detail in multiple formats, such as conference calls, online meeting rooms for visual support, and closed captioning.
3. In the reviewer training, provide concrete examples of what to look for in the application when scoring each section.
4. Clearly define “conflict of interest” between reviewer and applicant, and ask probing questions of reviewers to ensure no conflict exists.
5. Complete an initial review of applications to ensure all required information is present, and put aside incomplete applications. These do not need to go to the review panels, as they did not meet minimum requirements.
6. Provide adequate time for panelists to review and score the applications prior to full panel review. Be available to provide support top self-advocate reviewers if needed.
7. Full review panels should utilize multiple formats, including audio and visual with conference call and online meeting room.

8. Ensure inclusive facilitation of review panelists, so everyone is heard. Facilitators must be strong models for this, as some reviewers may need more time to speak.
9. Facilitators should summarize comments and scores on each part of each application to keep everyone focused and aware of progress.
10. Walk cautiously where proposals rely heavily on information technology, as there are significant disparities in access to technology, accessibility of technology, and support and assistance needed to utilize technology
11. Provide adequate time for full panel review. Plan for follow-up time to accommodate scenarios where full review is not completed in planned time. It is far better to plan for a second meeting of the panel and not need it, than to need it without having it planned in advance.
12. An additional staff person should be present with the facilitator in every full review panel to take notes of reviewer comments. This frees the facilitator to manage the technology and conversation.
13. Review comments should be returned to applicants so they learn what went well and what could be improved in their grant writing.
14. Provide visual cues for scoring rubrics such as a Likert scale of points with happy faces on one side and sad faces on the other.
15. Provide prompting questions for each section of scoring rubric, to guide reviewers in what to look for when considering score.
16. If a tiebreaker is needed to identify the highest-scoring applications for funding, consider geographic location, cultural and linguistic diversity, and other demographics of applicants' groups (for example, a youth self-advocacy group). Determine these criteria well in advance, and include it in the scoring rubric.
17. Conflicting recommendations were received regarding the scoring process: (a) Consider averaging scores of reviewers, rather than require panelists to agree on score, to avoid arguments on panel; and (b) Require panelists to agree on a score to encourage conversation and make the most of this learning opportunity regarding grant writing. Consider both options in advance, and clarify with reviewers.

Funding Awards

1. Carefully review contract template. Remove any requirements that are not absolutely necessary. Recognize that self-advocacy organizations may not be as developed as other groups who receive federal or foundation funds, and set contracting expectations accordingly (see Appendix B).
2. Provide a companion document to explain sections of the contract (see Appendix C), as well as a glossary of terms. This will help self-advocacy organizations become familiar with the language used in grants and contracts.
3. Double-check scope of proposed work and budgets of highest-scoring applicants to be sure their efforts are within the guidelines of the RFA, and that no monies are allocated for costs that were restricted in the RFA. Communicate with grantees where necessary to revise budget accordingly.

Ongoing Grant Management

1. Keep grantees on task with the deadlines for invoices and reports by sending reminder emails a month out, then once a week out and finally the day before the due date.
2. Follow up with grantees personally after receipt of each report to review progress on their project and be available to provide technical assistance on any topic.
3. If a grantee is not communicating effectively, be persistent until receiving a response from the contact person. When contact has been made, review the grantee's responsibilities in maintaining communication regarding the award. Reach out to others for assistance if problems with communication persist; it is likely someone else knows another way to reach the grantee.

Language Accessibility

Several self-advocacy groups, including National Youth Leadership Network, Kids As Self Advocates, Green Mountain Self-Advocates, and others, have developed guidance for language accessibility. The recommendations below reflect their guidance.

Recommendations:

1. Use clear and direct language; avoid or explain conceptual words
2. If using a complicated (hard) word is necessary, explain what it means in the same sentence
3. Use examples to explain complex ideas and concepts
4. Use short sentences (generally fewer than 15 words)
5. Use one and two syllable words as much as possible
6. Use clear font like Arial or Verdana. Serif fonts have tiny details at the ends of some strokes of letters. This can cause letters to blur together and make them harder to distinguish
7. Use clear headings, left-aligned to separate short chunks of text. Headings help people find or keep their place in the document
8. Ensure that RFAs and grant applications instructions are provided in screen-reader friendly format
9. Provide a glossary to explain grants/contracts terms that may be unfamiliar
10. Provide a companion document that explains the template language in cognitively accessible language if template language cannot be changed due to administrative rules
11. The language used in the templates should be accessible to everyone. Providing a companion document may be at least one way of making them more accessible if there is no way to change the language required by the HHS administrative rules.

12. Use word processing software tools to check for accessibility
13. In Microsoft Word 2010, click on File > Check for issues > Check accessibility)
14. Use word processing software tools to check for readability
15. In Microsoft Word 2010, click on File > Proofing > ensure “Show readability statistics” is checked
16. Then click Review > Spelling and Grammar > click through until “Readability Statistics” is displayed. Flesch-Kincaid Grade Level should be at 8 or below

Self-Advocacy Organizational Development

Used with permission of Association of University Centers on Disabilities (AUCD)*

Background

Self-advocacy is central to the Developmental Disabilities Act (to learn more about the DD Act click here). Many programs in the DD Network have made self-advocacy a priority and partnered with people with intellectual and developmental disabilities to support self-advocacy organizations. Local and state self-advocacy organizations are important. They organize and support people with intellectual and developmental disabilities so that they can learn from each other, help each other, and work to make their voices heard. The self-advocacy movement has grown over the past 40 years. Many of these groups seek to operate independently of the DD Network.

In 2011 and 2012, the Administration on Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (AIDD) supported 9 regional Self-Advocacy Summits to further strengthen the self-advocacy movement in the states and learn about national priorities. Funding of self-advocacy organizations is one priority that came out of the Self-Advocacy Summits.

AIDD is offering a small number of mini-grants to self-advocacy organizations. The goal of these grants is to provide self-advocacy organizations the opportunity to build their organizations and show their success. There are two types of grants: the first type is for self-advocacy organizations to grow and become stronger; the second type is for self-advocacy organizations that are ready to provide peer-to-peer support to help other self-advocacy organizations grow and become stronger.

The mini-grant application and process will be managed by the Association of University Centers on Disabilities (AUCD) who facilitated the Self - Advocacy Summits and has managed many mini-grants in the past.

The Grants

There are 8 mini-grants broken into two groups.

A

Up to 5 awards of $5,000 each for self-advocacy organizations to grow and become stronger. Applicants must be self-advocacy organizations that have not yet filed as nonprofits at the state and federal level (501(c)3 status).

B

Up to 3 awards of $30,000 each for self-advocacy organizations to provide technical assistance to other self-advocacy organizations. Applicants must be self-advocacy organizations that have been recognized as nonprofits at the state and federal level (501(c)3 status).

The grant period will be January 1, 2013 through December 31, 2013.

Application

Applicants must use AUCD's online application system at www.aucd.org/app.

Applicants must create a username and password and upload all documents to the online application system. Online applications will be available by October 10, 2012.

All applicants must upload their documents and submit their applications by midnight, Eastern Time on November 26, 2012. Applicants are encouraged to submit applications early to allow time for any technical difficulties, and feel free to contact AUCD staff with questions.

Information for Group A Applications

Capacity Building for Self-Advocacy Organizations

Many self-advocacy groups do not have formal registration as a non-profit organization, and might have very informal structure in place. The grants offered here are for self-advocacy organizations that want to move to the next step of strengthening their organization and become a non-profit. Just like any nonprofit, self-advocacy groups need to grow their structure and capacity and work within federal, state and local requirements so that they can apply for grants, manage grant money, and continue as a strong organization. This may include the following activities:

- Increasing the number and diversity of members
- Increasing the number and diversity of volunteers
- Writing a “mission statement” (the purpose of your group)
- Setting up a process to choose leadership
- Making a plan to carry out activities
- Making a plan to select advisors
- Finding partners
- Establishing an accounting system (keeping track of your money)
- Writing “by-laws” (the rules for how your organization works and makes decisions)
- Filing for local, state and federal (IRS) tax exemptions

Hey Group A! This list is called the “scope of work”

Organizations who get Grant A must work with a partner that is a 501(c)3 nonprofit (like an ally or another self-advocacy organization) to accept the funds and manage the grants. AUCD cannot give money to organizations that are not yet nonprofits, which is why this partner is needed here.

A Bottom Line:

This grant is for self-advocacy organizations that are not yet 501(c)3 nonprofits to help themselves grow, become stronger, and take steps to be able to apply for and get other grant funding.

Application Package:

- Cover page (see Attachment A) including the name and address of contact person and partner. This is the person who will be the main contact for this project, and the address where checks will be sent.
- Narrative including the items below (see Attachment B for sample). This should not be longer than 6 pages, double-spaced, in 12-point font, with one-inch margins. It includes:
 - History of your self-advocacy organization, including date started, area served, number and diversity of members, number of staff & volunteers, and activities.
 - Names of people who will work on this project with description of duties and their personal and professional experience in ID/DD
 - Explanation of what your organization will do with the money, according to the “scope of work” listed above for Group A
 - The timeline for activities
 - How you plan to continue work when this grant has ended, including getting future funding and continuing self-advocacy activities.
 - Roles and responsibilities of a partner (either an ally or other self-advocacy organization) that can help your organization manage the grant (keeping track of what work was done, sending invoices for payment, and keeping track of the budget). Include details about how the support will be provided.
- Short (one or two page) resumes – documents that give a person’s professional and educational history – of people who will work on this project
- A “budget justification” – a document that explains why your budget costs are reasonable

Budget:

- A budget outlining how your organization will use the funds (see Attachment C for budget worksheet)

Letter of Commitment:

- A letter of commitment from the partner that outlines their understanding of their roles and responsibilities. The letter must be signed by the executive director or CEO of the partner organization.

Peer-to-Peer Assistance to Help Other Self-Advocacy Organizations

Many self-advocacy organizations have grown enough to be able to provide peer-to-peer assistance to other self-advocacy groups. These organizations have already become nonprofits (known as 501(c)3 status). The grants offered here are for those self-advocacy organizations that want to help other self-advocacy organizations become stronger. This may include helping other organizations with the following activities:

- Writing the “mission statement” (the purpose of the organization)
- Setting up a process to choose leadership
- Writing description of organization
- Writing “by-laws” (the rules for how the organization works and makes decisions)
- Completing paperwork to become a formal non-profit 501(c)3 organization at state and federal level
- Creating and maintaining financial records (writing budgets and keeping track of the money)
- Writing grants and finding funding for self-advocacy
- Managing public and private grants (applying for grants, writing reports, submitting invoices, and doing the work)
- Building partnerships with other organizations
- Using the internet and technology for meetings, trainings, discussions, resource sharing, and community building
- Increasing the number of members and volunteers that represent the diversity of the state
- Learning what people with disabilities in your community need

 - Names of people who will work on this project with description of duties and their personal and professional experience in ID/DD
 - Explanation of what your organization will do with the funds, according to the scope of work outlined above for Group B, including
 - The organizations to whom you plan to provide technical assistance
 - The areas of technical assistance that your organization plans to offer
 - The timeline for activities
 - A plan to continue work when this grant has ended, including getting future funding and continuing self-advocacy activities.
 - Experience assisting other self-advocacy organizations, if any
- Short (one or two page) resumes – documents that give a person’s professional and educational history – of people who will work on this project
- A “budget justification” – a document that explains why your budget costs are reasonable
