

*Definitions are provided at the end of this page

Morehouse School of Medicine National COVID-19 Resiliency Network

What is this project about?

The Morehouse School of Medicine is working on a project called the National COVID-19 Resiliency Network, or NCRN. This project brings together organizations from across the country to meet the COVID-19 needs of people from minority races and ethnicities. NCRN does this by:

- Creating clear and easy to read information on COVID-19
- Sharing COVID-19 resources for communities that do not receive enough of the COVID-19 services they need
- Doing research to learn more about the communities that are most affected by COVID-19

What is AUCD's role?

The role of AUCD is to make sure that people with disabilities are included in conversations about what people need during COVID-19. We will share information and resources about COVID-19 that is easy to understand and reflect many different cultures.

Definitions

Race - A way we talk about groups of people based on how they look or their family history

Ethnicity - a group of people who share their own culture, history, language, religion, and set of traditions

Culture - The way of life shared by a group of people: things such as their language, music, religion, art, and more.

Pandemic - A outbreak of a disease that spreads among many people over a wide area

Resiliency - the ability to be strong